Hague Tribunal controversy hints at aims of U.S., Israel

WILLIAM PFAFF

The Hague's裁定 has added a new dimension to its previous assertions concerning the aim of U.S.- Israeli policy — or at least of some of its key elements — concerning the plight of Palestinians.

The Hague's verdict, as described by its president, Mr. Richard D. Nowak, last December, is a significant development in the ongoing international tribunal's efforts to bring to justice those responsible for war crimes in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Mr. Nowak, speaking at a news conference at The Hague, said the judgment was a "significant step forward in the effort to hold accountable those responsible for war crimes in Iraq and Afghanistan." He added that the tribunal was "well placed to deliver justice for the victims of these grave crimes.

The Hague's ruling has added a new dimension to its previous assertions concerning the aim of U.S.- Israeli policy — or at least of some of its key elements — concerning the plight of Palestinians.

The Hague's verdict, as described by its president, Mr. Richard D. Nowak, last December, is a significant development in the ongoing international tribunal's efforts to bring to justice those responsible for war crimes in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Mr. Nowak, speaking at a news conference at The Hague, said the judgment was a "significant step forward in the effort to hold accountable those responsible for war crimes in Iraq and Afghanistan." He added that the tribunal was "well placed to deliver justice for the victims of these grave crimes.

"The Hague's verdict has added a new dimension to its previous assertions concerning the aim of U.S.- Israeli policy — or at least of some of its key elements — concerning the plight of Palestinians. The Hague's ruling has added a new dimension to its previous assertions concerning the aim of U.S.- Israeli policy — or at least of some of its key elements — concerning the plight of Palestinians.

The Hague's verdict, as described by its president, Mr. Richard D. Nowak, last December, is a significant development in the ongoing international tribunal's efforts to bring to justice those responsible for war crimes in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Mr. Nowak, speaking at a news conference at The Hague, said the judgment was a "significant step forward in the effort to hold accountable those responsible for war crimes in Iraq and Afghanistan." He added that the tribunal was "well placed to deliver justice for the victims of these grave crimes.

...