The Washington Post

The Japan Times

THERESA H. KROMER, Executive Editor

WALTER OTTENBERG, Managing Editor

MARK R. GROFF, Associate Publisher

TAKASHI MORISOTO, President & CEO

KAZUAKI SAWADA, COO

TAJIRI S. TAKAI, CFO

TOMOKO YAMAUCHI, Director of Publishing

CHUN H. CHI, Director of Digital

ELIZABETH M. KALISH, Editor-in-Chief

JAMES C. K. KIM, Executive Editor

ZHANDI RICHARDSON, News Editor

SHIRLEY K. HAMADA, Editorial Page Editor

ANDREW BROWN, Features Editor

JACK McLEAN, Sports Editor

RICKY ITO, Digital Design Director

ROBERT GRINER, Art Director

THE JAPAN TIMES

THURSDAY, AUGUST 22, 2013

11

PAGE: 11

Inadequate financial plan

Larry Summers and a tale of two Harvard professors

JAPAN'S MILITARY COMEBACK

Previous president of South Korea used the phrase "big deal" often to express his excitement and urge others to join him in the cause. Indeed, the phrase once held special meaning in South Korea and it has been used by many politicians and leaders to emphasize the importance of their initiatives or projects.

One important aspect of the phrase was its use in political campaigning and public relations to highlight a significant achievement or milestone. The phrase was often used to convey a sense of urgency or importance, and to create a sense of excitement and enthusiasm among the public.

In Japan, the phrase "big deal" has been used by politicians and policymakers to highlight the importance of their initiatives or projects, particularly in the areas of economic and social development. The phrase has been used to emphasize the significance of government programs and policies, and to create a sense of excitement and enthusiasm among the public.

The phrase "big deal" has also been used in the context of military affairs, particularly in the context of national security and defense. The phrase has been used to emphasize the importance of Japan's military capabilities and its role in regional security, as well as to highlight the need for increased defense spending and resources.

In the context of Japan's military affairs, the phrase "big deal" has been used to emphasize the importance of Japan's military capabilities and its role in regional security, as well as to highlight the need for increased defense spending and resources. The phrase has been used to emphasize the significance of government programs and policies, and to create a sense of excitement and enthusiasm among the public.

The phrase "big deal" has been used by politicians and policymakers to highlight the importance of their initiatives or projects, particularly in the areas of economic and social development. The phrase has been used to emphasize the significance of government programs and policies, and to create a sense of excitement and enthusiasm among the public.

The phrase "big deal" has also been used in the context of military affairs, particularly in the context of national security and defense. The phrase has been used to emphasize the importance of Japan's military capabilities and its role in regional security, as well as to highlight the need for increased defense spending and resources.